PREFACE

MEMBERS OF THE DALHOUSIE COMMUNITY

Last year, Dalhousie's Strategic Direction 2014-18 identified inclusion and diversity as one of the university's critical priorities. Charter 5.2 within the Strategic Direction focuses on fostering a collegial culture grounded in diversity and inclusiveness.

In early January, President Richard Florizone accelerated the work under Charter 5.2. We started that work by bringing together faculty, staff, and students from diverse communities across our University. We read the reports produced by other Canadian universities. We reached out to you and asked you to provide us with your input. Ultimately, we produced this report: a document that explores how Dalhousie can better support a diverse and inclusive community. Given the interest in these topics following events in the Faculty of Dentistry, as well as a desire to engage our community while the winter term was still in session, we operated under a short-but-intense timeline, targeting the completion of our report shortly after the February Study Break.

With the release of this report, Phase 1 of the work under Charter 5.2 is complete. Our goal was to get the conversation started. Phase 2 starts now.

Our committee will assist in the transition into the next stage of this strategic initiative. Assistant Vice-President, Human Resources, Katherine Frank will lead a new cluster of faculty, staff, and students in the work of Phase 2. As part of the transition process, we expect to discuss the report with a variety of communities, including with Senate in April.

As noted in the report, in some cases, we expect individuals, offices, faculties, and units will take immediate action in response to the recommendations. In other cases, we anticipate the need for considered conversation and respectful dialogue. We have requested a timeline for each recommendation be provided to Senate by October 2015, and that Senate, the Board of Governors, and senior University administration review progress annually.

PREFACE

We thank everyone who found time to meet or connect with us. We welcome feedback and comment on this report, which can be submitted online at https://www.dal.ca/oc/oc-report or to any committee member. We hope that you find a moment to read and reflect on this report and to discuss it with others at Dalhousie. Perhaps, and most ideally, it will inspire you to take steps in your own faculties and units to support a more inclusive and diverse Dalhousie. We look forward to working on this project together.

In many cases, exclusion and marginalization are unintentional – a matter of unquestioned assumptions, lack of knowledge, or inadequate skill. While that may make it a challenge to recognize the barriers to inclusion, the effects of exclusion are profound, even when not intentional. Moreover, individuals can be acutely conscious of some dimensions of exclusion while being oblivious to other dimensions of exclusion. Openness to an understanding of the experiences of others is crucial. If we want to create an institution that values democratic engagement, and that celebrates our participation in both local and global society from our home on the shore of the Atlantic, we need to develop and support new skills.

In this action report, you will find 15 recommendations. Each recommendation includes specific activities that should be taken to implement it.

What makes our approach unique is that it focuses not only on the institutional mechanisms required to support an inclusive and diverse university, but also on the ways in which each of us must take responsibility for supporting inclusion and diversity. We are convinced that simply changing a policy or two,

Enhance data collection about diversity at Dalhousie

A Expand the data collected on the diversity of our student body on admission to include queer and working class backgrounds in addition to racialization, sex, indigeneity, and disability, and require that data be reported to Senate and released publicly on an annual basis. Explore whether admissions data could be effectively updated annually.

Timeline : Short term

Accountability : Senate, Student Services, and Registrar's Office

B Survey all faculty and staff to build rich longitudinal data on our diversity regularly, potentially through the workplace survey.

That survey should include more axes of diversity, including queer and working class in addition to racialization, gender, indigeneity, and disability. The survey instrument should enable reporting that presents a more "human" composite of our community by, for example, not tokenizing an individual by "counting" them as multiple entries if they happen to belong to multiple categories. The results should be reported publicly and tabled at Senate.

Timeline : Short term

Accountability : Office of the Provost and Vice-President Academic and Human Resources

Better understand and support proactive engagement to improve inclusion and diversity in the faculty and the student body

A Create a council or committee on inclusion and diversity in each faculty or unit without one, with design specifications that meet the needs of that particular faculty or unit, to proactively identify and address issues

B Design and implement a formal, mandatory program for all students at Dalhousie. Many of the people who spoke with us expressed significant enthusiasm for a mandatory course for all first-time students to Dalhousie. Others felt that a mandatory course may be counter-productive because, for example, it would be difficult for those with experience/s of sexualized violence to be in a class where other students talked disrespectfully about their experience, or because the course might become a negative lightning rod for students opposed to its objectives. An alternative model was not to have “a course” on inclusion topics, but rather to require students to attend a number of events, lectures, courses, or student activities on campus, read and discuss relevant scholarly resources, and to build a portfolio of engagement that would be a requirement of graduation. A third model was to qualify some courses already in the curriculum as meeting a critical engagement perspectives requirement. There were a variety of suggestions for the focus of this offering. Some people urged a focus on democratic citizenship (that would include a discussion of how to talk constructively across difference); others suggested a focus on anti-oppression. Several options for how to fit such a course within the resource constraints of the University were suggested, including pairing the writing requirement with courses that focused on anti-oppression themes. There are several successful working models of courses on topics in the broad vein of anti-oppression or democratic engagement available on campus and some faculties already have this requirement for their students. We discussed how this requirement should be met for students in advanced degrees, and noted that we would need to determine who is a “student” for purposes of the requirement. Students in professional programs and graduate degrees might be required to take a mandatory intensive cross-disciplinary course together that focuses on cultural inclusivity in a professional context and digital and other professionalisms as part of their program requirements.

C Design and implement ongoing education plans, responsive to the needs and roles of different positions, for all staff and faculty to support a fully inclusive University. Almost every group with whom we consulted insisted on the importance of required training for faculty and staff, and many members of our community are eager for training. Education could target varying levels of knowledge and skills to meet varying needs. For example, some people could benefit from education about language use in some areas of diversity, while others may need education about how to train and supervise front-line staff to work more inclusively. We imagine that education programming could be designed in a way that celebrates expertise at Dalhousie and that encourages cross-disciplinary and cross-unit engagement. For example, each staff and faculty member on campus could be required to participate in a minimum of one inclusion-related module a year, with participation considered to be part of the workday. We would need to determine who is a faculty or staff person for the purposes of this requirement. Modules could be developed by units or faculties, building on that unit's strengths

(e.g. teaching students with visual impairments or respectful engagement with administrative staff, or cultural inclusion when working with students from China). Staff and faculty could be encouraged to attend a session offered on a campus other than their own at least once every five years. We need to consider ways to ensure participation, such as incentives for individuals or units that achieve particular rates of participation.

D Building from the optional programming already in place, design and implement an ongoing mandatory education plan for senior university administration from Deans, Directors and Chairs to the President and Board of Governors to support a fully inclusive university. We note that a similar proposal was included in a 2010 discussion paper by then Vice-President Academic & Provost, Alan Shaver. Among other important topics, the education program should include improved application of employment equity and inclusion principles in all aspects of Dalhousie's activities.

Provide additional support on respect and inclusion

A Explore the potential of upstander programming. Some universities, and some parts of Dalhousie, have implemented bystander or upstander training programs. These programs are designed to support students, faculty, and staff to learn ways to intervene when they see something unacceptable occurring (usually sexualized violence). Such programs have potential and might be expanded to include how to effectively intervene in a work setting or learning environment when inappropriate or disrespectful comments are made, or how to effectively raise issues of difference in discussions with friends and co-workers. The models available need further review before implementation at Dalhousie, but hold considerable promise for altering the culture toward respect.

REFLECT

As a result of the 2008 financial crisis, the U.S. economy has experienced a significant downturn. The unemployment rate has risen to over 10%, and many businesses have closed their doors. This has led to a loss of income for many people, and a decrease in the overall standard of living. The government has implemented various stimulus packages to help stimulate the economy, but the recovery has been slow and uneven. Many people are struggling to make ends meet, and the future of the economy is uncertain. This has led to a loss of confidence in the government and the financial system, and a sense of hopelessness among many people. The crisis has also highlighted the need for stronger financial regulations and a more robust safety net for people in need. The recovery process is still ongoing, and it is important to continue to work together to address the challenges ahead.

While it was not uniformly the case that the people we heard from were enthusiastic about change, and while we know that many members of our community may be resistant to or skeptical about our proposals, we were encouraged by the honesty and enthusiasm we heard. We have some groups and individuals doing outstanding, daily work on these issues. We also have many individuals and groups hungry for more support and education and keen to play a bigger role in creating an inclusive and diverse community at Dalhousie. We underscore that this report, thick as it is with recommendations, is not “the end” of what should happen on our campus. For example, we have not spent time on any individual faculty, or unit or program. We hope our report contributes to what will undoubtedly be an ongoing conversation, and that it spurs constructive and meaningful change. Ultimately, we hope we have started a conversation that will make Dalhousie a community in which we all belong.
